One session he said don't bring personal problems to me in dokusan just practice. So I said I'm doing this in practice + that in breathing and he said without any sarcasm he leaned over to me and said "I give you a gold star."

He was just getting to know me and he asked me about myself. I said I'm a social worker. He said that's good - you're helping people. "It's not always easy to know when you're helping people." At the time I didn't know what he meant but I do now. A few years later - my landlady took care of him when he first came. He told me about his wife. "Oh he's just very nice man." She told me about the wife who was murdered.

We had a session. I was trying to rescue lady bugs at swimming pool. I wanted to ask him - what do you do when you want to help being and you can't. (crying) But I couldn't say it because I thought I'd sound too stupid. Now I realize I could of asked him and he would of understood perfectly and would of helped me.
